Rubber and polyurethane rollers are available in 15 durometer soft, 30 durometer medium, and 50 durometer hard. The standard durometer of 30 is used for most inking applications, lithographs, reliefs, monotypes, etc. For viscosity printing a set of 3 rollers is generally used: 15, 30 and 50 durometer. The S.L.C. (Simulated Leather Covering) roller is offered as a replacement for leather. This material had fibers that run completely through the covering. The surface of the roller looks and feels like peach fuzz thus simulating some of the inking characteristics of leather with the clean-up ability of rubber. One roller can be used with a number of colors. Conrad Machine Company can manufacture any size roller you may desire up to 30" in diameter and 48" in length. Any material and thickness of covering can be obtained. Call with all your needs and for price information and delivery pricing.

FELT ETCHING BLANKETS

Prices effective April 1, 2023

Conrad Machine offers some of the finest etching blankets available anywhere. We have the largest selection of thickness. 1/16" thick pressed sizing catcher - - 1/16" thick woven sizing catcher - - 1/8" thick woven pusher - - 3/16" thick woven pusher - - 1/4" thick pressed felt.

The standard set of felts listed below consists of 1/16" pressed sizing catcher - - 1/4" pressed cushion - - 1/8" woven pusher

The order of thickness typically is the sizing catcher goes on top of the paper to be printed, then the 1/4" thick cushion in the middle with the 1/8" woven pusher on top. The upper roller of your press will press up against the 1/8" woven pusher that's on top.

Don't feel this is the only way to arrange your felts. Feel free to experiment - - you may find that you can use different arrangements for different types of printing with better results.

Care, Cleaning and Information on Hand Inking Rollers (By: John Graves)

We are often asked what the difference is between the polyurethane and rubber rollers. Polyurethane initially has a little more tack than rubber. However, polyurethane tends to build up ink and gum glaze more quickly and may end up with less tack after prolonged usage. Rubber becomes harder with age and polyurethane becomes softer with age, though it takes years for these changes in durometer to occur. The change can be dramatic though, in the case of polyurethane, as after ten years or so it can lose its polymerization entirely and actually drip off the core of the roller. Durability and abrasion resistance is about equal between polyurethane and rubber. We have found that rubber rollers come through the closest (least margin of error) to the durometer we specify. For a set of three rollers for viscosity printing we recommend 15-18 durometer rubber for the softest, plus 30 and 50 durometer for the medium and hard rollers

We recommend that regular cleaning of synthetic rollers and brayer (rubber and polyurethane) be done with a mild petroleum solvent such as kerosene, mineral spirits or isopropyl alcohol. However, when the roller has been used for awhile, glazes build up on the surface and need to be removed with a deep cleaning solvent such as Varn 120 Wash. This product also prolongs roller life as it contains antioxidants and plasticizers. DO NOT use harsh solvents such as Acetone, MEK, Lacquer Thinner, Xylene or Film Cleaner to clean rollers. They can destroy the rollers.

Those wishing to avoid the use of solvents entirely can clean up using vegetable oil followed by dishwashing detergent with water. DO NOT use this technique on leather rollers.
